FUND COMMENTARY

The leveraged debt markets continued to post healthy returns in April as U.S. rates declined slightly, the price of oil rose, additional fiscal stimulus plans were announced, and earnings season started with strong results. All of this occurred amid a backdrop of accelerating reopening in the U.S., though the global reopening has been less consistent. The H0A0 Index posted a return of 1.1% for the month and ended with an option adjusted spread (OAS) of 328bps (8 bps tighter than the prior month). This represented the strongest monthly return of 2021.

Within the high yield bond market, longer duration issues broadly outperformed for the month, a reversal from earlier in the year. The riskier credits, as measured by credit ratings, continued to outperform with CCCs outpacing other categories, but not as dramatically as during the first quarter. Oil & Gas and Midstream were the top performing industry sectors. No sector posted negative returns, though Telecom and Healthcare were notable laggards. New issuance continued at a record pace in high yield, with use of proceeds led by refinancing, but there is a continuing flow of M&A-related financing coming to market, which in many cases is bringing new issuers into the asset class. The default rate also continued to decline and ended the month at 3.17%, a 14-month low. Ratings upgrades year-to-date have been outpacing downgrades by nearly a 2:1 ratio, based on data from JP Morgan.

While rates have been more range-bound this month than earlier in the year, there appears to be increasingly divergent views on where sustained U.S. inflation will settle and how it will impact rates. Additionally, markets seem to still be pricing in a smooth reopening, coupled with an extended boom from pent-up demand and fiscal spending. We still believe these expectations may result in bouts of volatility if the path of recovery diverges from a straight line.
